I. Introduction

On January 29, 2018, the Federal Trade Commission (“FTC”) brought this action asserting claims arising from § 13(b) of the Federal Trade Commission Act (“FTC Act”), 15 U.S.C. § 53(b). Dkt. 1. It sought temporary, preliminary, and permanent injunctive relief, rescission or reformation of contracts, restitution, refund of monies paid, disgorgement and other equitable relief for acts and practices in violation of § 5(a) of the FTC Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45(a). Complaint, Dkt. 1 ¶ 1. The Complaint names the following defendants: Digital Altitude LLC (“Digital Altitude”), Digital Altitude Limited (“Digital Altitude UK”), Aspire Processing LLC (“Aspire Processing”), Aspire Processing Limited (“Aspire Processing UK”), Aspire Ventures Ltd (“Aspire Ventures”), Disc Enterprises Inc. (“Disc”), RISE Systems & Enterprise LLC (“RISE Utah”), Rise Systems & Enterprise LLC (“RISE Nevada”), Soar International Limited Liability Company (“Soar”), The Upside, LLC (“Upside”), Thermography for Life, LLC (dba Living Exceptionally, Inc.) (“Thermography”) (collectively “Corporate Defendants”), Michael Force (“Force”), Mary Dee (“Dee”), Morgan Johnson (“Johnson”), Alan Moore (“Moore”) and Sean Brown (“Brown”) (collectively “Individual Defendants”).¹

The FTC filed an ex parte application seeking a temporary restraining order (“TRO”) against Defendants and an order to show cause why a preliminary injunction should not issue (“Application” (Dkt. 5)). An in camera hearing on the Application was conducted on February 1, 2018. Dkt. 32. Based on a finding of good cause, the Application was granted and a TRO was issued. Dkt. 34. Among other relief, it imposed an asset freeze on Defendants, subjected the Corporate Defendants to the imposition of a temporary receivership, and barred certain affirmative conduct. Dkt. 32, 34. The hearing on the order to show cause as to the request for the issuance of a preliminary injunction was set for February 15, 2018. Dkt. 32.

On February 12, 2018, the parties² filed a stipulation to continue the hearing on the preliminary injunction to permit Defendants additional time to “explore the possibility of stipulating to a Preliminary Injunction, and, in the event such an agreement cannot be reached, to prepare for a hearing on the matter.” Dkt. 58 at 2. The stipulation was approved by an order that adopted the proposed March 5, 2018 date for the hearing on the request for the issuance of a preliminary injunction. Dkt. 61. The TRO was also extended to the same date. Id. Prior to the hearing, Moore, Brown, Johnson and Upside each stipulated to the entry of a preliminary injunction as to each of them. Dkt. 74, 76, 85, 103. These stipulations were approved through corresponding orders. Dkt. 90, 91, 92, 107.

¹ The term “Defendants” is used to refer to all Individual and Corporate Defendants.

² Disc is the only party that did not join in this stipulation. When it was filed, Disc had not been served. The FTC represents that service of Disc has now been effected. Dkt. 80. However, Disc has not responded to the Complaint or the Application.

On February 27, 2018, Force, Dee, Thermography³ and Digital Attitude (“Responding Defendants”) filed an opposition to the entry of a preliminary injunction. Dkt. 78. Responding Defendants and the FTC submitted requests to permit live testimony during the preliminary injunction hearing. Dkts. 81, 83, 99. An order was issued requiring that declarations presenting direct testimony for each declarant that the parties sought to have present live testimony be submitted, so that the Court could determine whether such testimony was necessary and appropriate. Dkt. 84. Declarations were filed by Dee and Force. Dkt. 95, 96. The FTC had previously submitted declarations for its proposed witnesses, see Dkt. 16-2 at 9-59, Dkt. 24, Dkt. 83-1, and it submitted a supplemental declaration for one of these witnesses. Dkt. 97-1. On March 2, 2018, the FTC filed a reply in support of the entry of a preliminary injunction. Dkt. 102.

On March 5, 2018, a hearing was conducted on the preliminary injunction. The Court granted in part the requests to present live testimony, permitting cross-examination and re-direct examination of Force, Dee and the temporary receiver Thomas Seaman (“Seaman” or “Receiver”). Dkt. 106. Pursuant to the consent of the Responding Defendants and the FTC, the hearing and the TRO were continued to March 6, 2018. At the conclusion of the hearing on March 6, 2018, the request for entry of a preliminary injunction was GRANTED IN PART, with the basis stated on the record, and with a more detailed, written order to follow.⁴

II. Background

A. Parties

1. FTC

The FTC is an independent, federal entity whose jurisdiction includes the right to enforce Section 5(a) of the FTC Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45(a). That statute prohibits unfair or deceptive acts or practices in or affecting commerce. Compl. ¶ 8. “The FTC is authorized to initiate federal district court proceedings . . . to enjoin violations of the FTC Act and to secure such equitable relief as may be appropriate in each case, including rescission or reformation of contracts, restitution, the refund of monies paid, and the disgorgement of ill-gotten monies. 15 U.S.C. §§ 53(b), 56(a)(2)(A).” Compl. ¶ 9.

⁴ Digital Altitude UK, Aspire Processing, Aspire Processing UK, Aspire Ventures, Disc, RISE Utah, RISE Nevada, and Soar did not oppose the entry of a preliminary injunction. Accordingly, the preliminary injunction is entered as to them.

Aspire Ventures is a United Kingdom company that also allegedly operates a website that directs consumers to Digital Altitude's website for payment. Id. ¶ 14. Disc is a Nevada corporation that allegedly has been used to open merchant accounts for processing consumers' credit card payments to Digital Altitude. Id. ¶ 15.

RISE Utah is a Utah limited liability company that allegedly has been used to open merchant accounts for processing consumers' credit card payments on behalf of Digital Altitude. Id. ¶ 16. RISE Nevada is a Nevada limited liability company that allegedly has been used to open merchant accounts for processing consumers' credit card payments on behalf of Digital Altitude. Id. ¶ 17. Soar is a Utah limited liability company. Digital Altitude allegedly has used its registered address in at least one account with a payment processor. Id. ¶ 18. Upside is a California limited liability company that allegedly has been used to open merchant accounts for processing consumers' credit card payments on behalf of Digital Altitude. Id. ¶ 19. Thermography is a Texas limited liability company that allegedly has been involved in Digital Altitude's allegedly fraudulent scheme since 2016. Id. ¶ 20.

3. Individual Defendants

Force is a California resident, the CEO and founder of Digital Altitude, the sole shareholder of Digital Altitude UK, and a member and manager of Soar. Id. ¶ 21. Dee is a Texas resident, a member and manager of Aspire Processing, RISE Nevada, and Upside, a manager of Thermography, sole director of Digital Altitude UK, sole shareholder of Aspire Processing UK and an officer of Digital Altitude. Id. ¶ 22.

Johnson is a Texas resident, member and manager of RISE Nevada, and an officer of Digital Attitude. Id. ¶ 23. Brown is a Utah resident, sole principal of RISE Utah, an officer of Aspire Processing and a member of the board of directors of Digital Altitude. Id. ¶ 25.

B. Allegations in Complaint

The Complaint alleges that Defendants operate a fraudulent scheme that takes advantage of consumers seeking to earn money through online businesses. The Complaint also alleges that Defendants falsely represent to such consumers that they can make large sums of money by applying the techniques and methods that are presented to them through the Digital Altitude digital marketing educational program. Compl. ¶ 4. Defendants allegedly represent through online advertisements and other marketing materials that this program will enable them to "start and grow a profitable online business" and "make six figures online in the next ninety days or less." Id.; see id. ¶¶ 35-37.

| Case No. | LA CV18-00729 JAK (MRWx) | Date | March 9, 2018 |
| Title | Federal Trade Commission v. Digital Altitude, LLC, et al. | | |

It is also alleged that Defendants represent to customers that they will receive “private and personal one-on-one business coaching” from digital marketing experts who are “making 6-Figures in their own online business.” Id. ¶¶ 54, 56. Defendants’ program consists of a series of tiered membership levels. They are called Aspire, Base, Rise, Ascend, Peak and Apex. For a consumer to have access to each, a membership fee must be paid. The membership fee increases for each of the successive levels. Id. ¶¶ 33-34. For example, the monthly fee for membership in the Aspire level is either $47 or $97, the one-time fee for Base is $597 and the one-time fee for Apex is $29,997. Id. It is alleged that Defendants charged many consumers more than $50,000 in membership fees and that total customer injury likely exceeds $14 million. Id. ¶ 6.

It is alleged that consumers are paid by Digital Altitude “when they recruit new consumers to join the program, in the form of commissions on the new consumers’ membership fees,” but they can only receive commissions for sales of membership levels they have already purchased themselves. Id. ¶ 41. Customers reselling Digital Altitude products are referred to as “affiliates.” It is alleged that the vast majority of consumers who pay these fees to Digital Altitude never earn substantial income. Therefore it is alleged that consumers do not earn the “six figure” income promoted throughout Digital Altitude’s marketing materials. It is alleged that, of those customers who actively seek to attract new program participants, more than 60% make less than $100 per month in commissions. Id. ¶ 46. Thus, the FTC alleges that Defendants’ representations as to the earning potential of customers who pay for Digital Altitude membership fees are deceptive.

It is further alleged that Defendants’ representations as to the “coaching” are deceptive. Id. ¶ 54. The coaches are allegedly salespeople paid on commission to sell Digital Altitude memberships to customers, who are not required to have any industry or coaching qualifications. Id. ¶ 55. It is also alleged that the role of the coaches is to upsell customers to each successive tier of Digital Altitude membership, not to provide substantive mentoring or other support to assist customers in developing skills to operate their own digital marketing business. It is also alleged that the materials that are provided by Defendants to consumers who purchase memberships from Defendants, have little educational or business value.

The FTC alleges that, after financial institutions closed Defendants’ merchant accounts in light of their suspect business practices and the complaints by consumers who paid fees with credit cards, Defendants opened additional merchant accounts. It is alleged that they did so in the names of third parties to ensure that Defendants could continue to benefit from the processing of credit and debit card payments by these third party entities. Id. ¶¶ 59-62. It is also alleged that certain misrepresentations were made to financial institutions to induce them to open such accounts. Id. ¶¶ 59-64.

C. Terms of the TRO

The TRO provided for the following relief:

- Appointment of a Receiver to control the operations of all corporate Defendants;
- Prohibiting Defendants from misrepresenting or assisting others in misrepresenting, expressly or by implication, any material fact in connection with the advertising, marketing, promoting, or offering for sale of any goods or services;
- Freezing Defendants’ assets;

D. Evidence Presented

1. FTC

The FTC presented a significant amount of documentary evidence and numerous declarations in support of the initial Application seeking the issuance of a TRO. See Dkts 16-27. The FTC presented further documentary evidence and declarations in support of its request for an entry of a preliminary injunction. See Dkts. 102-1, 102-2, 102-3, 102-4. The FTC submitted evidence including, but not limited to, declarations from 24 consumers who had made purchases from Digital Altitude, screenshots of Digital Altitude websites, transcript excerpts from the depositions of Force and Dee, and copies of Digital Altitude’s internal marketing materials. At the outset of the hearing, the FTC moved to admit certain of these documents and other evidence, including the Receiver’s First Report and Inventory (“Receiver’s Report” (Dkt. 93)). Responding Defendants did not object to the admission of such evidence, and it was admitted. See Exs. 1-41, 45, 56, 59-82; Dkt. 93.

2. Dee

Dee submitted a declaration stating that she is the Chief Operating Officer of Digital Altitude and principal owner of Thermography. The declaration provides an overview of the services provided by Thermography to Digital Altitude and the role it played in creating a merchant account on behalf of, and facilitating certain payment processing for, Digital Altitude. Dkt. 96 ¶¶ 1-21.

She declares that she “had no control over the content of Digital Altitude’s videos,” which were “handled by a separate team at Digital Altitude.” Id. ¶ 24. She further declares that she believes the videos are not deceptive, “hundreds of thousands of people . . . purchased Digital Altitude’s programs and videos and have benefited from them,” and “only a miniscule [sic] number of people were unhappy with Digital Altitude’s programs, compared to the thousands of people who were satisfied.” Id. ¶ 23.

She declares that sub-entities created to facilitate payment processing were established for what Defendants believed were legitimate business purposes. This includes “to help alleviate—not circumvent—the chargeback issue.” Id. ¶ 26. She further declares that she “had no knowledge of misrepresentations I, or anyone working on my behalf at Digital Altitude, made regarding the products or services that were offered to consumers . . . [or] consumers['] earnings potential.” Id. ¶¶ 35-36. She declares that she has incurred and will continue to incur significant medical expenses for her treatment for breast cancer. Id. ¶¶ 41-44. She declares that if the terms of the proposed preliminary injunction were adopted, it would impose significant hardships on her. Id. ¶ 47.

Dee also testified during the preliminary injunction hearing. She was credible as to many matters, but lacked some credibility as to others. This conclusion is supported by her tone, demeanor, evasive answers and conflicting answers. For example, Dee could not provide a clear or responsive explanation as to the different cost estimates she had provided under oath for her monthly medical expenses in her declaration and in her live testimony.⁵ For this reason, less weight is given to her testimony about the nature, value and integrity of the Defendants' operations.

Dee testified that she was responsible for the day-to-day operations of Digital Altitude. She also acknowledged that she was aware of its representations that customers could readily earn income of at least $100,000 within 90 days of purchasing services from Defendants. She is also familiar with the business coaching that was provided to such customers.

Dee also testified that she handled certain customer complaints directly and was aware that certain customers complained of alleged deception by Defendants, including as to the value of the teaching materials and presentations. She testified as to several email exchanges she had with customers of Digital Altitude who lodged complaints about the lack of value of the services provided and the substantial amounts that were charged for them. See Exs. 1-3. She testified that two customers who complained received at least a partial refund of the amounts that each had paid. No documentary evidence was introduced that reflected such payments. She testified that less than 1% of customers filed complaints and that she is not aware of all complaints filed with Digital Altitude. No admissible documentary evidence was introduced to support this assertion.

Dee also testified that she knew that Digital Altitude had high chargeback rates and that certain financial institutions had taken actions to limit Digital Altitude's ability to accept and process certain credit card transactions due to concerns over fraud. However, she attributes the high chargeback rates to innocent mistakes made early in the operation of Digital Altitude. Dee also testified about the third-party merchant account arrangements entered into by Digital Altitude after problems arose with its direct merchant accounts. She stated that these third-party arrangements were drafted and entered into with the advice of counsel. She stated that she believed that these arrangements were proper and provided a more efficient means of managing corporate finances.

3. Force

Force also submitted a declaration. It states he is the CEO and owner of Digital Altitude. He provided statements that present a general overview of Digital Altitude, its products and its commitment to customer service. It also addresses the contracts presented to and signed by customers purchasing certain products from Digital Altitude, the conspicuous display of disclaimers, refund policies and terms of service on Defendants' websites, and his involvement in narrating Digital Altitude's videos. Dkt. 95 ¶¶ 1-10. He declares that he has "no knowledge that Digital Altitude has misrepresented goods or services that it provides." Id. ¶ 13. No further details are provided to support this conclusory statement. He also declares that the TRO has caused harm to Digital Altitude employees, affiliates and other customers and that if the request for a preliminary injunction is granted, the relief would impose further hardships on him and his family. Id. ¶¶ 14-19.

Force testified during the hearing. He was credible as to many, but not all matters. As with Dee, this conclusion is based on an assessment of his tone and demeanor as well as his lengthy, non-responsive answers to questions. It is also based on his answers to questions about his past income in which he stated that he was uncertain and would have to review his tax returns. He was also unable to explain how he covered living expenses in 2013 and 2014, when his prior testimony was that he did not earn income during either of those years. He also provided different statements on these issues in the Defendants' marketing materials that were provided to consumers. He also failed to provide a straightforward answer when asked whether he was the sole owner of Digital Altitude, having made that representation during his deposition testimony. He provided a somewhat evasive answer when asked how many types of coaches existed in the Digital Altitude system, despite providing a clear and direct answer on this issue during his deposition.

Force testified at the hearing that Digital Altitude's coaches provide significant value to consumers by motivating them to remain committed to the Digital Altitude educational program. He testified that Digital Altitude's materials, including the workbooks and videos, have significant educational value. He testified that he narrated the videos on the Digital Altitude website and that he played a role in drafting the scripts for these videos.

He testified that Digital Altitude seeks anonymous feedback from customers as a means of monitoring the performance of coaches. He further testified that he did not review all of these survey responses but that his department heads would review them and present him with trends needing to be addressed. He also testified that Digital Altitude did not analyze how many customers made over $100,000 in 90 days, nor did it analyze whether certain customers were able to make over $1,000,000 by purchasing the highest level membership. He testified that he could not recall any customers who started successful businesses outside of the resale of Digital Altitude products or whether any such customers had made over $100,000 in 90 days through the operation of such an independent business.

4. Seaman

On March 1, 2018, Seaman filed the Receiver's Report. Dkt. 93. The Receiver's Report was admitted into evidence without objection by Defendants. Dkt. 106.⁶ The Receiver's Report sets forth findings by Seaman based on the work that he and his staff performed over a one-month period after he was appointed. The Receiver's Report includes findings that, based on a review of Digital Altitude's internal materials, no affiliates reselling Digital Altitude products have received commissions of at least $100,000 during any 90-day period, and that only one affiliate ever received commissions that exceeded $100,000.

⁶ During the hearing, Seaman testified about the contents of the Receiver's Report, including that based on all of the work that he has performed, he firmly believes that the statements in the Report are true and correct.

It also concludes that Digital Altitude cannot be operated lawfully or profitably, and that such a finding motivated his decision to cease all business operations to preserve the entity's remaining assets so that they could be used to provide restitution and other relief to aggrieved consumers.

Seaman testified during the preliminary injunction hearing. He was very credible. His demeanor and tone support this conclusion. He provided direct answers and did not overstate his knowledge or recollection. He testified that he and his staff have spent considerable time reviewing materials since the initiation of the receivership, and that they had reviewed and jointly discussed thousands of pages of materials.

He also testified about the decision he made to cancel a Digital Altitude event planned for Whistler, British Columbia for February 18, 2018.⁷ He testified that the event would require a significant expenditure of Digital Altitude's resources and that it was appropriate to cease the entity's business operations, including such events. He further testified that the coaching call scripts he reviewed contained misleading representations as to earnings potential and that such calls provided little to no educational value to customers. Rather, he testified that such call scripts demonstrated that coaches were instructed to use high-pressure sales techniques. He testified that he has received a significant number of consumer complaints, refund requests and other negative comments about Digital Altitude. He further testified that a considerable investment of time, resources and funds would be necessary to modify or remake Digital Altitude's products so that they could offer some value. He also testified that a review of all of the materials available left him uncertain as to what precise benefits Digital Altitude was seeking to offer its customers.⁸ He testified that the educational materials were of no real value, but just restated general and broad business principles.

III. Analysis

A. Legal Standards

Pursuant to § 13(b) of the FTC Act, an injunction is an available remedy with respect to alleged violations of the statute that are being enforced by the FTC. 15 U.S.C. § 53(b). "Upon a proper showing that, weighing the equities and considering the Commission's likelihood of ultimate success, such action would be in the public interest, and after notice to the defendant, a temporary restraining order or a preliminary injunction may be granted without bond." Id. "Harm to the public interest is presumed." FTC v. World Wide Factors, Ltd., 882 F.2d 344, 346 (9th Cir. 1989). Section 13(b) also "empowers district courts to grant 'any ancillary relief necessary to accomplish complete justice.'" FTC v. Commerce Planet, 815 F.3d 593, 598 (9th Cir. 2016) (quoting FTC v. Pantron I Corp., 33 F.3d 1088, 1102 (9th Cir. 1994)). Courts have routinely granted the injunctive relief sought here. See e.g., FTC v. Bunzai Media Group, No. 2:15-CV-4527-GW (PLAx), 2015 WL 5305243 (C.D. Cal. Sept. 9, 2015); see also FTC v. Affordable

⁷ Responding Defendants questioned whether he reviewed two Digital Altitude workbooks prior to making this decision. See Ex. 108, 109. He reviewed the documents and stated that he could not recall whether he personally reviewed them, but stated that his staff reviewed documents he did not personally review, and that he discussed with them their content and significance.

⁸ Responding Defendants contend that this statement shows that Seaman's testimony is not credible and that he is not qualified to oversee Digital Altitude. These arguments are not persuasive. Seaman's testimony demonstrates sufficient familiarity with Digital Altitude's business operations. Further, his statements are consistent with an independent review by the Court of the relevant marketing materials.

B. Application

1. Likelihood of Success on the Merits

a) Legal Standards

The Complaint alleges that, in violation of Section 5(a) of the FTC Act, Defendants made misrepresentations regarding earnings and services. Section 5(a) prohibits “[u]nfair methods of competition in or affecting commerce[] and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in or affecting commerce.” 15 U.S.C. § 45(a)(1). A misrepresentation may be express or implied. FTC v. Figgie Int’l, 994 F.2d 595, 604 (9th Cir. 1993). “[A] practice falls within this prohibition (1) if it is likely to mislead consumers acting reasonably under the circumstances (2) in a way that is material.” FTC v. Cyberspace.com LLC, 453 F.3d 1196, 1199 (9th Cir. 2006) (citing FTC v. Gill, 265 F.3d 944, 950 (9th Cir. 2001)).

“A solicitation may be likely to mislead by virtue of the net impression it creates even though the solicitation also contains truthful disclosures.” Cyberspace.com, 453 F.3d at 1200; see also FTC v. Stefanichik, 559 F.3d 924, 928 (9th Cir. 2009) (“Deception may be found based on the ‘net impression’ created by a representation.”). A misrepresentation is likely to mislead consumers if the express or implied statement is false, or if the party making it lacked a reasonable basis for asserting that it was true. Pantron, 33 F.3d at 1096. A misrepresentation is material if it “involves information that is important to consumers and, hence, likely to affect their choice of, or conduct regarding, a product.” Cyberspace.com, 453 F.3d at 1201. “Express product claims are presumed to be material.” Pantron, 33 F.3d at 1095-96.

To establish liability as to Force or Dee arising from the alleged misconduct of Digital Altitude and the other corporate defendants, the FTC must demonstrate that the corporate entity “committed misrepresentations of a kind usually relied on by a reasonably prudent person and resulted in consumer injury,” and that the individual person “participated directly in the violations or had authority to control the entities.” FTC v. Grant Connect, LLC, 763 F.3d 1094, 1101 (9th Cir. 2014) (citing FTC v. Publ’g Clearing

i. Whether the FTC Met its Burden to Show Misrepresentations to Consumers

The FTC presented substantial evidence to support its claim that Digital Altitude made false representations to customers. This included statements about the amount that customers were likely to earn if they purchased Digital Altitude products, e.g., that they were likely to earn at least $100,000 within the first 90 days of operations after they purchased the products and services of Digital Altitude. Other representations concerned the business coaching services provided to customers, including that customers would be provided with one-on-one business coaching from successful digital marketing entrepreneurs and that this service was a central component to the Digital Altitude program.

The Receiver’s Report, the content of which Seaman confirmed during his testimony, states that based upon his review of Digital Altitude internal documents, he concluded that no Digital Altitude affiliate has ever earned $100,000 in commissions in 90 days, and that only one affiliate has ever earned $100,000 in lifetime commissions from Digital Altitude. His review also led him to conclude that most affiliates receive little, if any, income through commissions. The FTC also introduced evidence about certain marketing materials that represented to customers who purchased the Peak level product would be able to grow a business with revenues of six figures to one with revenues of seven-figures. Force testified that he was not aware of any data that supported this claim.

The FTC introduced evidence that the services of Digital Altitude were of little value to those learning to operate an online business, and were primarily focused on persuading customers to purchase more expensive services from Digital Altitude. The evidence included screenshots of Digital Altitude websites and advertisements, transcripts from Digital Altitude videos, which Force narrated, internal marketing materials, the aforementioned 24 consumer declarations and complaints by other customers. During his testimony, Force could not identify the basis upon which the representations about earnings were made. He also testified that that Digital Altitude did not use a data-based approach to tracking the earnings of its affiliates. However, he testified that he had received testimonials from certain customers at Digital Altitude events.

Defendants argued that declarations from 24 dissatisfied Digital Altitude customers is a very small sample size given the thousands of customers who purchased services. They also argued that there are many satisfied customers. However, very limited evidence was presented by Defendants in support of this claim.⁹ The FTC also submitted evidence demonstrating that it received a significant number of customer complaints related to Digital Altitude. Further, the Receiver testified about receiving many complaints from consumers during his short tenure.

The FTC also presented evidence that supported its claim that Digital Altitude's representations as to the expertise, digital marketing experience and income of its coaches were untrue. Force testified that the role of the coaches was to motivate Digital Altitude customers to continue advancing through the steps of the program and that such support was of substantial value to the customers. He compared it to the role of a fitness coach who encourages a client to train effectively. Force did not dispute that coaches encouraged customers to purchase additional services from Defendants by enrolling in successive membership levels. Defendants presented copies of the educational materials provided to customers. They contained certain information about sales, marketing, planning and commitment. The FTC presented competing evidence, including the testimony of the Receiver and the comments of customers, as to the limited value of these generic materials about business operations.

The Receiver testified that, based on a review of Digital Altitude's workbooks, videos and other educational materials, it is his opinion that they offer little value. Force disagreed. He testified that the materials provided useful insights about how to operate successfully in digital marketing, especially for customers with little to no experience in the field. Force testified that customers were able to gain accreditation with the Social Media Marketing University ("SMMU") through their Digital Altitude membership. He said that this is an important example of the educational value provided by Digital Altitude products. However, at his deposition, Force testified that Digital Altitude ended its contract with SMMU because it was not providing any value. Ex. 17.

A consideration of the conflicting testimony as to the value of the educational materials, the relative credibility of the witnesses who provided that testimony, as well as review of the materials themselves, which were introduced as exhibits, shows that for purposes of the request for a preliminary injunction, the FTC's position is more persuasive.

At the outset of the hearing, the Court raised issues with respect to whether the materials provided by Defendants had been used by any customers to develop digital businesses independent of serving as affiliates of Digital Altitude. Defendants' counsel acknowledged that this was a significant issue because it would undermine the claim of the FTC that the Defendants' operations were improper, designed to induce purchases without corresponding value, and established to induce customers to recruit others to purchase the products. Notwithstanding this colloquy, Defendants did not introduce any evidence of such independent, successful business operations by any customer. Force testified that he could not identify any customer who fit into this category.

⁹ Defendants proffered what was represented to be a summary of certain survey information provided to them by customers. Ex. 110. The objection to the admission of that exhibit was sustained for several reasons, including that the survey itself was not proffered, and no basis for its reliability was presented.

Case No. LA CV18-00729 JAK (MRWx)

Date March 9, 2018

Title Federal Trade Commission v. Digital Altitude, LLC, et al.

As noted, Dee testified that two of those identified by the FTC as dissatisfied customers received refunds from Digital Altitude. No documentary evidence was provided to support this statement.

Responding Defendants also argue that their representations are not misleading because Digital Altitude websites contain relevant disclaimers and disclosures and customers sign contracts disclaiming their reliance on any of the challenged representations. This argument is not persuasive. The standard for determining if a misrepresentation is actionable under the FTC Act is whether the “net impression” is “likely to mislead,” even when it also “contains truthful disclosures.” Cyberspace.com, 453 F.3d at 1200. For purposes of the request for the issuance of a preliminary injunction, Responding Defendants have not put forth sufficient evidence to rebut that presented by the FTC that the net impression of Defendants’ advertising, marketing and other representations has been misleading.

For the foregoing reasons, the FTC has presented sufficient evidence to support a finding that it is likely to prevail on the merits with respect to whether Responding Defendants made misrepresentations, or ones that were without a reasonable basis to consumers regarding earning potential and business coaching. . Similarly, it has met this burden with respect to whether such misrepresentations were material to the decisions by consumers to purchase Digital Altitude products and services. Finally, it has met this burden as to whether an ordinary customer behaving reasonably under the circumstances would have been misled.

ii. Individual Liability of Force and Dee

Force testified that he is the CEO and owner of Digital Altitude, participated in drafting the scripts for Digital Altitude videos, narrated all of these videos, and was active role in managing and overseeing Digital Altitude’s business operations. Dee testified that she is the COO of Digital Altitude and played an active role in managing and overseeing Digital Altitude’s business operations. Force and Dee each declared that he or she was without any actual knowledge of any misrepresentations or intent to make or promote any such misrepresentations. They argue that the FTC has not demonstrated that it can pierce the corporate veil and impose personal liability for conduct of corporate officers acting within the corporate purpose.

The corporate veil doctrine has not been advanced by the FTC as a basis for liability. Rather, as noted under the FTC Act, an individual defendant may be liable if he or she “had knowledge that the corporation or one of its agents engaged in dishonest or fraudulent conduct, that the misrepresentations were the type upon which a reasonable and prudent person would rely, and that consumer injury resulted.” Grant Connect, 763 F.3d at 1101 (quoting Publ’g Clearing House, 104 F.3d at 1171). For purposes of the motion for a preliminary injunction, the FTC has presented sufficient evidence on this issue. Thus, it has shown a likelihood of success on the merits that Force and Dee each “had actual knowledge of material misrepresentations, [was] recklessly indifferent to the truth or falsity of a misrepresentation, or had an awareness of a high probability of fraud along with an intentional avoidance of the truth.” Id. at 1101-02 (quoting Publ’g Clearing House, 104 F.3d at 1171). Further, control over entities involved in a fraudulent scheme “establishes strong evidence of . . . knowledge,” and “[t]he extent of an individual’s involvement in a fraudulent scheme alone is sufficient to establish the requisite knowledge for personal restitutionary liability.” Affordable Media, 179 F.3d at 1235.

The evidence as to the potential liability of Force and Dee included that each held a high position within Digital Altitude, through which each carried out substantial, day-to-day oversight, management and control of its operations. It also met the applicable standard as to whether each was aware of the nature of the representations being made to consumers. For example, each was integral to the operations of Digital Altitude and oversaw the work of others. Force was an active owner. He participated in preparing the materials at issue, appeared on all of the relevant videos and presented at conferences operated by Defendants. The evidence also supported the assertion that Dee was very active in overseeing her staff and the operations of Digital Altitude.

The evidence was also sufficient to meet the current standard about knowledge of the misrepresentations that were made to consumers. Neither Force nor Dee could identify the basis for the claim that Digital Altitude customers could earn a six-figure income in less than 90 days of purchasing its services and products. Nor did either present evidence about taking any steps to substantiate those representations.

Dee testified about her communications with customers who had complained about the representations made, and services and products provided, by Digital Altitude. She also testified that she was aware that Digital Altitude had problems with high chargeback rates due to consumer dissatisfaction, that payment processors had terminated certain Digital Altitude merchant accounts, and that Digital Altitude was placed on certain lists by credit card processors for identifying high-fraud-risk entities.

Force and Dee each testified about the substantial positive feedback that they had received from many customers. Force testified about steps that were taken to terminate certain coaches who did not meet the high standards that Digital Altitude imposed on their performance. He also testified about the process pursuant to which consumers could provide anonymous reviews of coaches. This testimony is consistent with that offered by the FTC as to the substantial role that Force and Dee played in the operations of Digital Altitude. Under the current evidentiary standards, it was not sufficient to rebut the evidence presented by the FTC as to the alleged deception of consumers.

2. Balance of the Equities

a) Legal Standards

“[W]hen a district court balances the hardships of the public interest against a private interest, the public interest should receive greater weight.” Affordable Media, 179 F.3d at 1236 (quoting World Wide Factors, 882 F.2d at 347). “[T]he public interest in preserving the illicit proceeds of [a fraudulent business scheme] for restitution to the victims is great.” Id.

b) Application

Responding Defendants argue that the balance of equities weighs against entry of the preliminary injunction. They argue that continuing the receivership and asset freeze would harm the consumers the FTC is seeking to protect. Specifically, they argue that Digital Altitude would be precluded from paying affiliates their earned commissions, consumers would not receive the products and services purchased from Digital Altitude, and consumers would not be able to attend the Digital Altitude events for which they may already have made financial commitments. Responding Defendants also contend that the private hardships imposed on Force and Dee are significant. Force and Dee each refers to the difficulty each will have in meeting personal and family expenses if their assets remain frozen. As noted, Dee presented evidence about her current, serious health condition, and the expenses she will incur in addressing it.

The FTC argues that the public interest in the requested relief outweighs these private interests. It contends that the preliminary injunction is necessary to prevent further unlawful business practices that mislead thousands of consumers. It also contends that, absent the entry of the requested injunctive relief, such consumers will continue to make payments to Defendants for services and products that have no value.

The FTC also contends that the asset freeze is warranted to maintain funds that can be used to provide restitution to consumers who have been deceived by Defendants. Based on the Receiver's Report, the FTC argues that collectively, consumers may be entitled to receive restitution of as much as $50 million. The Receiver's Report states that the current assets of Responding Defendants total approximately $2 million.

A balancing of these hardships favors the entry of a preliminary injunction. The public interest is to "receive greater weight," Affordable Media, 179 F.3d at 1236, and Responding Defendants have not demonstrated that the private interests outweigh this presumption. The need to protect consumers from further potential deception and losses, and to provide a means for restitution to consumers if the FTC ultimately prevails on the merits, outweighs the private interests that have been identified. Further, the most significant hardships identified by Force and Dee concern their respective needs to meet day-to-day and health care expenses. This issue is addressed in the terms of the preliminary injunction, which permits each to apply for the release of funds to meet reasonable expenses.¹⁰

¹⁰ Responding Defendants have offered to modify certain advertising and marketing representations to address certain issues raised by the FTC. Specifically, they are willing to "place even more conspicuous disclosures on all ... websites to prominently feature the differences between the expected earnings of its affiliates and those individuals who do not wish to work with Digital Altitude," "make changes to its more aggressive advertising campaigns," and "cooperate with the FTC to reform their use of [sic] to meet any reasonable requests of the department." Dkt. 78 at 12, 16. These proposals are not sufficient to address all of the issues raised by the evidence that the FTC has presented. Nor does this offer moot the FTC's requests for preliminary and permanent injunctive relief. See Affordable Media, 179 F.3d at 1237 ("[A]n action for an injunction does not become moot merely because the conduct complained of was terminated, if there is a possibility of recurrence, since otherwise the defendant's would be free to return to [their] old ways." (quoting FTC v. Am. Standard Credit Sys., Inc. 874 F. Supp. 1080, 1087 (C.D. Cal. 1994))). However, the terms of the preliminary injunction include a means by which Defendants can make a proposal for the modification to the business approach and materials of Defendants. The nature of such a proposal, its cost and sources of funding, can all be considered if such an application is presented to the Receiver.

3. Conclusion

The FTC has demonstrated a likelihood of success on the merits and that the balance of equities weighs in favor of entering the preliminary injunction. Therefore, the request for the entry of a preliminary injunction is GRANTED.

IV. The Terms of the Preliminary Injunction

A. Background

The authority to grant injunctive relief under Section 13(b) includes “all the inherent equitable powers . . . for the proper and complete exercise” of the court’s jurisdiction. FTC v. H.N. Singer, Inc., 668 F.2d 1107, 1112 (9th Cir. 1982) (citation omitted). This includes the authority to freeze assets, when the party seeking such relief has demonstrated that the assets would likely be dissipated and unavailable for subsequent remedies that may be entered. Id. at 1113; Johnson v. Couturier, 572 F.3d 1067, 1085 (9th Cir. 2009).

The FTC has requested that the preliminary injunction include all terms set forth in the TRO, which include a continuation of the receivership and asset freeze. It argues that Force and Dee should not be permitted to withdraw from the frozen funds to cover living and medical expenses. Responding Defendants argue that any preliminary injunction should be narrowly tailored to prohibit deceptive business practices. They also contend that the FTC has not put forth sufficient evidence to justify the receivership and asset freeze.

Seaman opined that Digital Altitude cannot be operated profitably or lawfully. For these reasons, he concluded that its operations should be suspended in order to preserve available assets. For the reasons stated above, this position has merit. Accordingly, the continuation of the receivership is necessary and appropriate.

The evidence is also sufficient to show that the FTC is likely to prevail on the merits with respect to its claims that Defendants made misrepresentations to financial institutions when creating third-party merchant accounts. This includes the claim that Defendants did so to sidestep the attempts by processors to discontinue services to Digital Altitude. When considered together with the evidence about misrepresentations, harm to consumers, and the roles of the Defendants, an asset freeze is warranted. It will protect the presently available funds that may be applied to restitution or other remedies. The FTC has presented evidence that as much as $50 million may be appropriate as restitution to consumers. The available assets total approximately $2 million.

The request by the FTC that no disbursements can be made by the Receiver to Force or Dee is rejected. Instead, each may apply to the Receiver for disbursements to meet reasonable and necessary living and medical expenses that cannot be covered by the applicant through his or her other assets, income or resources, those of his or her spouse, or those that may be shown to have been transferred by the applicant to another person to avoid potential recovery as to claims like those brought in this action.

preserving the frozen assets for potential relief to consumers should the FTC prevail in this action. In seeking the release of funds, Force and Dee each may elect to petition the Receiver for a release of the same amount of funds each month, with each specifying a monthly amount. This would not preclude specific requests for other expenses during any month. The Receiver may consider such monthly disbursements if he determines that it would be a more efficient means of addressing the request for release of funds. To the extent there is a disagreement between Force and/or Dee and the Receiver as to the amount to be distributed, it may be presented to the Court for resolution.

Upon granting a petition, the Receiver shall notify one or more financial institutions holding funds of the petitioning party, instructing the financial institution(s) to release funds to the petitioning party in the amount requested. Any petitioning party who receives such funds pursuant to such a petition shall document the use of the funds, including by maintaining receipts and other evidence showing how the funds were applied, and providing such receipts or other evidence to the Receiver upon his request.
